PRODUCTION HISTORY

PLAY: A (Mini) History of Theatre for Kids was first performed at the Paul Penna Downtown Jewish Day School in Toronto on November 2, 2015, in a One Little Goat Theatre Company production directed by Adam Seelig. Since then, it has been performed for thousands of children in elementary schools throughout Toronto.

CAST

A a person (male in this text - can be played by anyone)

M Mavis-the-Sometimes-Cat and others
(female in this text - can be played by anyone)

DEAR ACTORS

Pace and emphasize the text as you and director wish. At certain points I've indicated a pause or silence or what-have-you with a long line (_____), but also feel free to pause or be silent or what-have-you in the middle of one of your dialogue entries if that's what's right.

The spacing of the script (whose first draft was written by hand – i.e. this is not a 'typewriter' piece) is generated by the vertical alignments of letters and words, creating a tonal zone for the dialogue. While the dialogue may not be conventionally naturalistic, by all means speak it as naturally, again, as you wish.

- Adam Seelig

A enters, plays guitar. M enters as a cat, with ukulele, and crosses to A.

A:

Hey Mavis

Μ:

Meow

 ${\bf M}$ stands up and plays the ukulele, joining ${\bf A}$ in the music. They bring their duet to a close.

A:

Okay so this play started with me here playing guitar on this stage

Μ:

Meow

A:

And with Mavis the cat (M purrs) ya Mavis the sometimes cat who sometimes meows sometimes talks depending and on the moment ya this play started with us -----Now let's farther back go let's go way way back let's see how the first plays started ----and who made the first in plays world ----the Children Kids like you kids from the beginning kids have always made plays seriously just imagine for а second just imagine i'm kid (M meows) а and i'll also imagine i'm kid а kid from а thousands of years and i'm ago walking around okay let's i'm say walking around fire а fire а pit i'm okay walking around the fire enjoying i'm and the fire the its flames way seem to jump and dance S0 i start to jump and dance little а around the fire too i'm enjoying and this i'm having a good time and when my sister sees me having a good time she joins me having good time a and too now we're both having a good time right we're having good time and (laughs) a and (laughs) and

M and A dance around fire in opposite directions. After a few rounds, M taps A on shoulder each time she passes him. Eventually, after another shoulder-tap, A changes directions, following behind M and taps her shoulder. M, surprised, turns around and taps A back, then A taps M, M taps A, A taps M, etc, in more rapid succession. ——. A chases M around fire until he tags her, then M chases A back until she tags him, etc, ending in both laughing and catching their breath.

why would we to play want those when we could play simple fun like ones tag instead well it's challenging to dribble а soccer ball fast all the way up the field it takes work and it's a serious challenge to do a pirouette but that's what makes it exciting that's what makes it more serious а kind of fun

you should see Mavis do pirouette she's really а good at it hey Mavis would please show you how us do one of you your pirouettes we'd really love to see one (M meows) you do hey Mavis come on Mave just one pirouette it'll be great there you go come on there over are that's you great now _____

M prepares for a pirouette. ———. Balks and walks away: Meow

the middle of in the game i decided to take my shoes and socks off S0 i could feel the warm under grass my i've always feet loved that feel of warm grass under my toes and i like being barefoot when i can as you see but can being barefoot wasn't allowed at school and i didn't know i wasn't that aware it wasn't allowed until one of my teachers outside called me over calls me off she the field and tells me to shoes back put my on put your shoes back please on Μ: Why can't i play barefoot A: Because it's not safe Μ: But but i've done

it

SYNOPSES & VOCABULARY

Ancient Greek Theatre

Antigone by Sophocles

King Creon creates a new law to keep his country safe; however, Antigone (pronounced "an-TIGuh-knee"), his teenaged niece, believes the new law is unfair, so she breaks it. This classic play about freedom versus security, originally written in the Greek language over 2,000 years ago, is still regularly performed all over the world today.

Sophocles' play asks this question: "What is more important: to be safe or to be free?" (The answer is: both. They are equally important.) Creon thinks it is more important to be safe, while Antigone feels it is more important to be free. They have opposite opinions, so they argue.

Sophocles (497-406 BCE, pronounced "SAW-fo-kleez") was a playwright in Ancient Greece. He wrote 123 (!) tragedies, plays with sad endings that explore challenging issues.

Japanese Noh Theatre

Komachi at Sekidera by Zeami

Komachi, born over 1,000 years ago (c.834), is one of the most celebrated poets in the history of Japan. Here is one of her poems (translated by Jane Hirshfield):

This abandoned house shining in the mountain village – how many nights has the autumn moon spent here?

Komachi lived a passionate and exciting life, but by the age of 99 she had become poor and lonely, living alone in a hut at Sekidera (located in Shiga, Japan). In the play Komachi at Sekidera, playwright Zeami shows the 99-year-old Komachi expressing her wish to live in better conditions, as she had in the past.

Zeami Motokiyo (c.1363-1443) was an actor and playwright who developed a special style of Japanese theatre called Noh. In Noh plays, actors play the roles of warriors, demons, ghosts and old women. Noh is the Japanese word for "skill," and it takes a lot of skill for actors to achieve the careful movements and speaking/chanting techniques of Noh. Noh actors often wear masks and use fans to play their character, moving very carefully and deliberately. As Zeami expressed it, whether an actor plays a warrior or an old woman, "it should seem as though each were holding a branch of flowers."

Modern Theatre: Gertrude Stein, Alfred Jarry & Samuel Beckett

Four Saints in Three Acts by Gertrude Stein

Four Saints in Three Acts, written by Gertrude Stein in 1927, is actually an opera in which all the words are sung, not spoken as in a play, but we have included it in PLAY because it is a brilliant example of nonsensical Modern Theatre. We love Stein's writing the same way babies love Mother Goose: for its captivating rhythm and delightful, often hilarious combination of words and phrases.

Gertrude Stein (1874-1946) was born in the United States but spent most of her life in Paris, France, where she wrote wildly inventive and clever texts in English. She is best known for the phrase: "a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose."

Ubu Roi (King Ubu) by Alfred Jarry

Over a hundred years ago (1896), when Alfred Jarry staged Ubu Roi, his play about a very-rudely-behaved king named Ubu, the Paris audience was so disgusted by what they saw that they stood up, yelled at the actors and stopped the play. The play caused a riot! Years later, however, when it was also performed as a puppet show, audiences started to appreciate the ridiculousness of Ubu and learned to laugh at (rather than be offended by) his outrageous behaviour and his silly expressions.

Alfred Jarry (1873-1907) was born in France. Playing pranks and being ridiculous were an important part of his life and plays, especially his best known play, Ubu Roi. Jarry had a pet owl and loved to ride his bike and go fishing.

Waiting for Godot by Samuel Beckett

Didi and Gogo wait by a tree for a character named Godot (pronounced "GOD-oh"), who never shows up. Huh? Then two other characters show up to make matters even stranger: one, named Pozzo, leads the other, named Lucky, by a leash, while Lucky utters gibberish. Waiting for Godot, written in 1953, is a play in which "nothing happens" in the oddest and sometimes funniest of ways.

Samuel Beckett (1906-89) was born in Ireland and moved to France as an adult. Even though Beckett was raised speaking English in Ireland, he also loved the French language, so he decided to write all of his plays in both English and French. (He would have felt at home in bilingual Canada, n'est-ce pas?)

VOCABULARY

Play: A game in which people (called actors) play different roles (called characters) and interact with each other.

Playwright: A writer who writes plays.

Comedy: A play with a happy ending.

Tragedy: A play with a sad ending.

Game: Games like tag are the first plays in our world - made up by children!

Script: When a play is written down (not all plays are, by the way), it is called a script. The script allows the actors to memorize what their characters say in the play.

Mime: To mime is to pretend an object exists. If I pretend to hold a cup of tea and drink "invisible tea" from an "invisible cup," I am miming the action of drinking a cup of tea. Most people mime something every day without even realizing they are using this special theatre skill. (In PLAY, for example, when the actors pretend to have a sword fight without holding actual swords, they are miming.) Charades is a popular game of mime.

Dialogue: When two or more people talk in a play, we call it dialogue.

Audience: People who watch a play.

Drama: Another word for theatre.

Ancient Greece

Olympics: A sporting competition invented in Ancient Greece featuring track and field.

Question: Some questions have clear answers; other questions are more complicated. When we ask the question, "What is two plus two?" there is a clear answer: "Four." When Sophocles' play asks us, "What is more important: to be safe or to be free?" there is no clear, single answer. That explains why Sophocles wrote an entire play on this question.

Principle: What you feel is right and true. Antigone feels everyone should be free: that is her principle. Creon feels everyone should be safe: that is his principle.

Citizen: A member of a city or country.

Inhuman, Barbaric, Ruthless: These words describe terribly unkind behaviour.

Decency: Acceptable behaviour.

Chaos: Total disorder and confusion. (This word was invented in Ancient Greece.)

Tyrant: A bully who runs a country. If a prime minister were a bully, we would call them a tyrant.

Noh Theatre

Play (verb): When an actor plays a character in Noh, they must not merely pretend to be that character or mimic what that character is like; they must feel what it is to be that character.

Mimic (verb): Imitate. If I change my voice so it sounds like my grandmother's, I mimic her voice. In some kinds of theatre, mimicking is used to make audiences laugh; in Noh theatre, however, mimicking is not done.

Fascinate: To hold someone's attention, to charm them.

Mystery, Secret: Sometimes we are fascinated by certain people because we sense there is an exciting mystery or secret deep within them. Zeami wants Noh actors to fascinate us in that way.

Mask: An actor will wear a Noh mask, which is carved from wood and painted, to cover their own face and become a character in the play, such as an old person (like Komachi), or a ghost, or even a terrifying demon.

Poet: Some poets rhyme, some poets don't, but what all poets have in common is the ability to make words express more than expected. There are poets who can express a lot with few words. Komachi is a great example of such a poet.

Modern Theatre

Modern: Today we use the word modern to describe things that strike us as new and exciting. The CN Tower in Toronto, for example, struck people as being modern when it was first built, and it still looks modern today. Similarly, Gertrude Stein's writing (much like the art of her friend Pablo Picasso) still feels modern today.

Nonsense: Nonsense may be the opposite of sense and meaning, but it is no less important, and it can be interesting and fun. Gertrude Stein, Alfred Jarry and Samuel Beckett all loved to use nonsense in their plays.

Ridiculous: Silly, funny, hilarious, amusing, droll, preposterous, ludicrous, laughable, nonsensical, comical, outrageous, absurd. People have created a category for plays like Waiting for Godot: "Theatre of the Absurd."

Waiting: The action of staying where you are until something else happens. Essentially, waiting is the action of inaction. Have you ever sat by a tree, or in the hallway, or on the stairs, or in a classroom, and waited for someone? Most of us grow impatient or bored when we have to wait in those situations, but maybe waiting is more interesting than we think. Beckett definitely thought so, which is why he wrote Waiting for Godot.

NOTES & ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From grades five to seven (1985-88), I went to Osler Elementary School in Vancouver, where, on a couple of occasions, a small opera troupe visited and performed in our school gym. I can't remember the 'take-home messages' of those performances, if they even had one, but I definitely remember their energy and spirit. Here, very much alive in front of me, was a group of people singing, moving and playing together dynamically and, in every sense of the word, harmoniously. They made an impression on me, and for all the theatres I've attended since, the gym floor of Sir William Osler might remain the most influential. Many thanks to my teachers from back then for bringing that troupe to us – especially Ms Monk, who, I recall, prepared us for one of the performances, ensuring its ideal reception – and, of course, thank you to the performers themselves for fostering those first encounters with the theatre. It is with those experiences in mind, and thinking of my own children, that I wrote PLAY.

Thank you to the exceptional actors – Rochelle Bulmer, Richard Harte and Jessica Salgueiro – who, for several years now, have tirelessly performed and contributed to PLAY.

Thank you to the many principals, teachers, and, most importantly, students who have welcomed the actors and me into your school. We have loved sharing the experience of PLAY with you. Thank you to Alison Rutherford at the Toronto District School Board's Model Schools for Inner Cities for coordinating many of these performances. Thank you to Danielle Bourgon for the educational consulting.

Thank you to Lisa Heggum for welcoming PLAY to the Toronto Public Library and the International Festival of Authors in 2016. Thank you to Cathy Murphy and Adrian Goodman for advice on this production.

Thank you to Norman Nehmetallah for his outstanding work on this book, and thank you to Aaron Tucker for introducing us.

Thank you to my parents for introducing me, with love, to the arts from the start.

Thank you, always, to Nomi, Shai and Arlo for your love and support.

PLAY was written in Toronto, on traditional territories of the Anishinaabe, Haudenosaunee, Huron-Wendat, Mississaugas of the New Credit First Nation and home to a diversity of Indigenous people.

PLAY was first performed at the Paul Penna Downtown Jewish Day School in Toronto on November 2, 2015. Thank you to Dan Goldberg and Janice Feldman.

The writing of PLAY: A (Mini) History of Theatre for Kids was supported by an Ontario Arts Council Theatre Creators' Reserve grant recommended by Theatre Direct (Lynda Hill, Artistic Director) – thank you.

Thank you to the Friends of One Little Goat Theatre Company, comprised of generous individuals who have made the company's productions possible. Thank you, too, to the company's supportive Board of Directors.

Thank you to the organizations that supported One Little Goat Theatre Company's development and production of PLAY: Toronto Arts Council, Ontario Arts Council, Canada Council for the Arts, TD Bank, Embassy of Ireland in Ottawa, Irish Cultural Society of Toronto and the Ontario Trillium Foundation, the last of which deserves special thanks for enabling One Little Goat to bring PLAY to 150 elementary schools, particularly Model Schools for Inner Cities, throughout Toronto, Etobicoke, North York and Scarborough from 2016-2020.

While the excerpt of Antigone (441 BCE) is my own version of the Sophocles, I am indebted to Robert Fagles for his outstanding translation.

"Angel from Montgomery" (1971) is by John Prine.

The excerpt of Sekidera Komachi (early 15th century) by Kanze Motokiyo Zeami is translated by Karen Brazell in Twenty Plays of the Nō Theatre, edited by Donald Keene (New York: Columbia University Press, 1970). I am grateful to Jane Hirshfield for the following observation (in introducing her co-translations for The Ink Dark Moon: Love Poems by Ono No Komachi & Izumi Shikibu):

In the history of world literature there is only one Golden Age in which women writers were the predominant geniuses. This occurred at the turn of the last millennium, when the emperors of Japan held court in the city of Kyoto, then called Heian-kyo. Ono no Komachi (834[?]-?) served at the court during the first half century of its existence; her poetry, passionate and complex, marks the beginning of the era.

The Gertrude Stein excerpt is the beginning of Four Saints in Three Acts (1927/1934) in Stein: Writings 1903-1932 (New York: The Library of America, 1998).

The Ubu excerpt ("Machiny it goes…") is a take on "La chanson du décervelage" ("The Song of the Disembraining") from one of Alfred Jarry's Ubu plays (Ubu cocu, 1896), which originally goes:

Voyez, voyez la machin' tourner, Voyez, voyez la cervell' sauter, Voyez, voyez les Rentiers trembler; Hourra, cornes-au-cul, vive le Père Ubu!

The Waiting for Godot excerpt is from Samuel Beckett, The Complete Dramatic Works (London: Faber and Faber, 1986).

ABOUT THE COMPANY

"Toronto's enterprising One Little Goat" (New York Times) is North America's only theatre company dedicated to poetic theatre. With over 15 years of acclaimed productions for adult audiences, the company is thrilled to make its theatre-for-young-audiences debut with PLAY.

One Little Goat is a not-for-profit, artist-driven, registered charity.

ABOUT THE PLAY

Beginning with classic games like tag, PLAY: A (Mini) History of Theatre for Kids is an exciting introduction to some of the world's most enduring games we call "plays." Performed by two actors, PLAY takes young audiences (grades 1-7) through four fascinating periods of drama:

- Early Beginnings: games around the fire
- Ancient Greek Theatre: Antigone by Sophocles
- Medieval Japanese Noh Theatre: Komachi at Sekidera by Zeami
- Modern Theatre: Gertrude Stein, Alfred Jarry & Samuel Beckett

This publication includes script, lyrics and sheet music.

(PLAY is in no way a complete history of theatre! Out of thousands of years in drama, it simply presents some favourite moments for kids, and adults, to appreciate.)
